SATURDAY, OCTOBER 5 News of the Morning

The U. S Steamer Lackawanna appears to have had a very tedious passage from Middlebrook Island to Honolulu, having been driven by adverse mutheasterly wunds to 36 ° 30 North latitude. She has accomplished the object of her cruise, which was to obtain reliable information respecting that island, and the practicability of making it a coaling station for the China mail steamers. What Capt. Reynolds' report is of course none but the Admiral and Navy Department at Washington can know at present. All the facts we can gather are given in another column. The current remor respecting the result of the visit of the Luckneuman to Middlebrook Island is that the report is adverse to making it a depot. On our fourth page will be found a brief account of the Tuscarora's visit to the Fiji Group in the South Pacific. We should before have attention in future, especially from foreigners, whose foreight had something to say about her cruise there, had we not understood that the publication of the shapped to the moste of cultivation required for this grain, and particulars was not agreeable to the officers of

There is no kind of forming in which a man of ed. The total population is about 130,600. The largest island, Vitilevu, is well adapted to grazing, and is covered with most beautiful pasture lands particularly suited to sheep. Foreigners are rapidly locating there, mostly Englishman from Sydney, and a few months ago, a tract of land was purchased for a sheep ranch, for which £30,000 was paid. For another £15,000. Capt. Stanley thinks that in a few years the group will virtually belong to the British Government, as it will become to all intents an English colony, the same as New Zealand.

On the largest island is a deep river, up which the officers went in boats about forty miles, and could the Tuscarora have crossed the bar she might have steamed up twenty or thirty miles. The banks of this stream are said to be charming, and must one day become densely populated, as there is room for extensive agricultural and grazing enterprises. Samples of long stapled Sea Island cotton were shown us, which measures for Hongkong, for which port the suited the same day. The proximity of the group to Sydney and Tahiti, eight or ten days' sail from either port, is attracting many settlers. These are mostly adventurers without means, who cause much trouble with the natives and among themselves. During the rebellion, these Sydney adventurers persuaded the Chiefs that the American Government was broken up, and that they would never see an American war ship there again. The effect was, that Americans were maltreated in many instances, and despoiled of their property. The visit of the Tuscarora has done good, in taxes thereon, which one would suppose was a very liberal effer. The modest Mr. B., however, declined to take the premises on those terms, unless the landlers would first give the inside of the house a coat of fresh paint and paper and the partor and dining-coam. Three years age the same house would have rented for $25 a month.

Three islands have been ceded to the American Government as security for the payment of the claims adjudged to be due, but the chiefs will be allowed their own time to pay them. Among the telegrams from Europe will be found an unusually important one to the effect that Russia has demanded of Turkey the cession end of ten days from September 10. This is the island which has been in insurrection against Turkey for the year past. It had a population f about 200,000 at the commencement of the rebellion, most of whom were Greek christians, and in sympathy with the Russian national church. emptory demands of Russia. Times, it is difficult to see how a general war can programme submitted : be avoided. Her fleets and armies once in motion, Russia would never consent to stop them until her long-coveted prize was secured. She has been making every preparation for a gigantic struggle, and must be thoroughly ready. This time she will fight under much more favorable circumstances than in the Crimean war. Her army and navy have been increased and vastly improved, her defenses have been strengthened, and immense stores of war material accomulated. In both the Black Sea and the Baltic she has powerful fleets, consisting of vessels of the most approved description; and the vast system of railoads which have been constructed in the last few years enables her to concentrate her troops, and bring to the point of attack or defense her entire available force. In Europe she probably counts upon the assistance of Prussia as against France, while, by an invasion of India, from which her Southwestern Asiatic army is not far removed, she would be able to strike England a vital blow, As the present move of Russia must have been long anticipated, the diplomacy of England and France has doubtless been occupied with preparations to meet it, but what combinations have been formed it is difficult to determine. Neither nation can desire a war with Russia. France has enough to do to maintain her position in Europe, and England has everything to lose by war. Yet neither power can safely allow Russia to carry out designs which would at once make her preponderance overwhelming, and prove fatal to their commercial as well as their political supremacy. They would no doubt gladly postpone the contest, but it is evident, from the preparations which Russia has been making, that

We could have wished that the shock had been less extensive and that none but the guilty ones had been punished; but the sweeping power of the rejection is evidence of the enormity of the offense committed against the party and the people by the usurpers.

The election then is not a Democratic victory, but a revelt of the Union party against wrong in its own ranks. It is a victory of the Union party over itself

The first plain proposition demonstrated by Wednesslay's vote, is, that politicians and tricksters cannot, with impunity, trife with the will of the people. They may cheat and defraud the people at primaries; they may manipulate and manage conventions so that the delegates shall misrepresent the wishes of their constituents, but there will come a day of retribution at the ballot-box, and outraged and defrauded people will be heard, even though the consequences be disastrous to themselves and their Westphalia Hams, and Bologna Sausages. party. The vote in this city is a fair illustration. 2,400 voters were on the Great Register, and yet the whole Democratic vote was brought out, and the only rational inference is that at least 4,000 Union men, who could not vote for the enemies of their country, were so disgusted with the manner in which
